

Hinch follows Racestrat's fortunes

Posted by: Derryn Hinch | 10 March, 2010 - 2:14 PM

Ask me which issue has generated the most concentrated number of phone calls and emails to the Drive program office in recent times?

If you said insulation or knife attacks or Justin Madden muckups, or climate change or clearways you would be wrong.

Tim Costello and Nick Xenophon won't like this, but the biggest issue that has prompted endless calls and emails is a thing called Racestrat.

Not 'racetrack' although it's all about race tracks. Racestrat. It's the brainchild of Hayden Bradford.

He has launched a betting challenge in which he plans to turn $1,000 into $11,000 by the end of November, and give the money to charity.

As part of it I plan to have him on the program at this time every week to give us one tip for the weekend.

Before I do here is his website: <http://www.racestrat.com.au/>

You can follow his progress and his tips are free. No fine print. No catches.